Junior .NET developer with remarkable ability to lead, to problem-solve and to be productive thanks to my previous experience managing my own business for more than 10 years. Despite the boom of the business and a good quality of living, my interest in the IT industry and programming languages grew exponentially. In addition to that, I've always loved to travel and experience different cultures and different lifestyles. When I got the chance to move to the U.S. from Italy, I focused only on my new passion: software development. I then earned a degree in Computer Science in order to pursue my dream in a country in which I always desired to live.
